

Colorado Lawyer Assistance Program

Feel rushed or overwhelmed?

*“Where's the fire, what's the hurry about? You better cool it off before you burn it out
You got so much to do and only so many hours in a day....
Slow down you're doing fine, You can't be everything you want to be before your time.”
~Billy Joel*

Is your life becoming a series of to-do lists? Does everything feel like an emergency? Are you consumed by a sense of urgency? Are you constantly juggling assignments, study group meetings, practice for moot court, e-mails and phone calls to return, trying to go to lunch with friends or loved ones, and squeeze in time for exercise? And that is just your “work” life as a student. What about all of the demands of family life? Get home for dinner, make sure the kids do their homework, housework, pay bills, etc. Are you becoming like the White Rabbit in Alice in Wonderland, “I’m late! I’m late! For a very important date! No time to say ‘Hello’ ‘Good-bye.’ I’m late! I’m late! I’m late!”

Take time to slow down. Being rushed all the time creates mental, emotional, and physical illness. Being a law student is demanding, but you can still manage your time and your mind in ways that promote your health and wellbeing. Sometimes, if you get enough adrenaline flowing through your body consistently over a few weeks or months (or years), you start to crave chaos and everything becomes an emergency to the nervous system.

Give your nervous system a break. Create rituals for yourself when you get up in the morning and get ready for school or work, use tools throughout the day to slow down, and have a ritual to relax in the evening. Waking up and going to sleep in a calm and peaceful way prevents you from feeling too rushed. Try some of these:

- Take a walk;
- Do yoga or just stretch;
- Drink a peaceful cup of tea or coffee rather than taking it to-go in the car;
- Eat your breakfast without the distraction of the TV or your computer in front of you;
- While you are driving, listen to soothing, upbeat music or a channel that makes you smile, or shut the radio off;
- Avoid distractions, such as talking to people on your Bluetooth while you are driving;

- When you get to your location, take a deep breath before you go in;
- Review your schedule for the day and be realistic about the time you budget for each project;
- When studying, get up from your desk at least once an hour and walk around;
- Place mantras or useful (inspiring, funny, etc.) quotes around your study area or home;
- Carve out time to eat your lunch without any school-related distractions;
- Every half hour, focus on your breathing for a just a few moments;
- When you get home, put away your clothes and change into something comfortable;
- Rather than watching TV or surfing the internet, take a walk to recharge after your day; and,
- Before bed, read something that interests you and is not school or work related.

There will be days where we run around like the White Rabbit, but this should not be the norm. Being rushed and urgent all the time prevents your brain from working properly, and law students cannot afford to make the mistakes that come from a brain that is in emergency mode and operating from the limbic system. The limbic system of your brain is emotional and can operate like a panic button, shutting down the parts of your brain associated with good decision making. So take Billy Joel's advice above, and slow down. You know how you can slow down on a daily basis, but the trick is to actually do it. As the saying goes, "practice makes perfect," so start now by taking a deep breath!

By Sarah Myers, JD, LMFT, LAC
 Clinical Director, Colorado Lawyer Assistance Program
 © Colorado Lawyer Assistance Program, 2017

Do you need help coping with your stressors and letting them go? Your Colorado Lawyer Assistance Program provides free and confidential services for judges, lawyers, and law students. If you need resources for ANY issue that is compromising your ability to be a productive member of the legal community, or if there is someone you are concerned about, contact COLAP at (303) 986-3345. For more information about COLAP, please visit www.coloradolap.org.